Property description

Architectural Record published the Cummins Indy Distribution Headquarters in its May issue with a review by Pulitzer prize-winning critic Blair Kamin. Deborah Berke Partners won the commission to design the office building, training center, and a new urban park that would heighten Cummins' presence and strengthen the resurgence of downtown Indianapolis. Cummins has a long history of supporting design excellence in Indiana, and we were proud to bring this lineage into the 21st century. "It's an impressive, innovative debut, one that extends this Fortune 500 engine maker's tradition of forward-looking patronage from nearby Columbus, Indiana—the small town that the company transformed into a showcase of modern architecture — to the state's largest city," Kamin writes.
